Technical Information

Country: Algeria

Field Period: April 15 – May 11, 2011

Principal Researcher: Abdenasser al-Jabi

Partner: University of Algiers

Sample size: 1,216

Sampling method: The survey represents a national probability sample design of adults 18 years and older. It was conducted face-to face in Arabic and used a complex sample design, which included stratification and clustering. Algeria has 48 wilayas or provinces which were combined into larger geographic areas yielding three strata: the north, the highlands and the south). Interviews were distributed proportional to population size. Primary sampling units (PSUs) are 1,541 official districts. Each district is designated as either urban or rural depending on the population. Districts with more than 1,100 residents are designated urban while those with fewer are designated rural. Within each district, households were randomly selected in clusters of 10. A total of 877 respondents were interviewed in urban areas compared with 339 in rural areas.

Weighting method: Sample is self-weighted for probability of selection; post-stratification weights were constructed for imbalances based on age and gender.

Country: Egypt

Field Period: June 16 – July 3, 2011

Principal Researcher: Jamal Abdul Jawad

Partner: Al-Ahram Center for Strategic Studies

Sample size: 1,219

Sampling method: The survey represents a national probability sample design of adults 18 years and older. It was conducted face-to face in Arabic and used a complex sample design, which included stratification and clustering. The survey was stratified by governorate and further stratified by urban-rural. Interviews were distributed proportional to population size. Within each strata, sampling blocks, which are designated by the Central Agency for Public Mobilization and Statistics (CAPMAS), were selected proportional to population size and served as the primary sampling unit. Within each sampling block, clusters of 10 households were randomly selected. Additionally, five governorates with a high percentage of Christians were selected with certainty. In total, 520 interviews were conducted in urban areas and 699 in rural areas.

Country: Iraq

Field Period: Feb. 20 – March 12, 2011

Principal Researcher: Munqith Dagher

Partner: Independent Institute for Administration and Civil Society Studies

Sample size: 1,234

Sampling method: The survey represents a national probability sample design of adults 18 years and older. It was conducted face-to face in Arabic and used a complex sample design, which included stratification and clustering. The survey was stratified by governorate and further stratified by urban-rural. Interviews were distributed proportional to population. The region of Baghdad was selected with certainty and interviews were distributed across the main districts. Within each district of Baghdad, interviews were distributed randomly across Nahiyyah which represented the primary sampling unit. Clusters of 15 houses were then randomly selected. In other urban areas, the primary sampling unit (PSU) was a Qadaa and the secondary sampling unit (SSU) was a Nahiyyah. Clusters of 15 houses were then selected from a random starting point. In rural areas, interviews were allocated to villages using a process of simple random sampling. Villages with populations of less than 1,000 inhabitants were excluded from the sample. Within each selected village, a map was drawn to divide the village equally into four sections. Houses were then selected using simple random sampling. A total of 883 respondents were interviewed in urban areas and 351 in rural areas.

Weighting method: Sample is self-weighted for probability of selection in urban areas and in rural areas and SRS was employed; post-stratification weights constructed for imbalances based on age and gender.

Country: Jordan

Field Period: Dec. 10 – 16, 2010

Principal Researcher: Mohammad Almasri

Partner: Center for Strategic Studies, University of Jordan

Sample size: 1,188

Sampling method: The survey represents a national probability sample design of adults 18 years and older. It was conducted face-to face in Arabic and used a complex sample design, which included stratification and clustering. The sample is composed of twelve strata representing the provinces of Jordan. The sample is further stratified by urbanity and interviews were distributed proportional to population size. Each province was then divided into primary sampling units (PSU) of blocks of 100 houses based on the 2004 census. Within each block, households were randomly selected in clusters of 10. A total of 990 respondents were interviewed in urban areas and 198 in rural areas.

Weighting method: Weighted for probability of selection; additionally weighted for imbalances based on age and gender.

Country: Lebanon

Field Period: Nov. 24 – Dec. 6, 2010 and April 9 – 24, 2011

Principal Researcher: Rabih Habr

Partner: Statistic Lebanon

Sample size: 1,387

Sampling method: The survey represents a national probability sample design of adults 18 years and older. It was conducted face-to face in Arabic and used a complex sample design, which included stratification and clustering. The survey was first stratified by the seven governorates of Lebanon: Beirut, Mount Lebanon, the North, Baqa'a, the South and Nabatieh. Additionally, the survey was stratified by socio-economic status and confessional identity for Shia, Sunni, Druze and Christians. Within each stratum, the sample was further divided by the 571 official populated districts, which are akin to municipalities and their surrounding areas. Interviews were distributed proportional to population size. Districts are further divided into statistical blocks, which are units containing approximately 100-150 households. These statistical blocks serve as the primary sampling units (PSU). Households were randomly selected in clusters of 10.

Weighting method: Sample is self-weighted for probability of selection; post-stratification weights constructed for imbalances based on age and gender.

Country: Palestine

Field Period: Dec. 2 – 5, 2010

Principal Researcher: Khalil Shikaki

Partner: Palestinian Center for Policy and Survey Research

Sample size: 1,200

Sampling method: The survey represents a national probability sample design of adults 18 years and older. It was conducted face-to face in Arabic and used a complex sample design, which included stratification and clustering. The survey was stratified by the West Bank and Gaza and then by province within each region. The sample was further divided by type of settlement (urban, rural and refugee camp). Interviews were distributed proportional to population. Census blocks (PSU), which comprise approximately 150 residential units, represent the primary sampling unity (PSU). Households were randomly selected in clusters of 10. A total of 820 respondents were interviewed in urban areas, 220 in rural areas, and 160 in refugee camps.

Weighting method: Weighted for probability of selection; additionally weighted for imbalances based on age and gender.

Country: Saudi Arabia

Field Period: Jan. 5 – Feb. 6, 2011 and March 26 – April 9, 2011

Principal Researcher: Local researcher

Partner: Local Research Institute

Sample size: 1,404

Sampling method: The survey represents a national probability sample design of adults 18 years and older. It was conducted face-to face in Arabic and used a complex sample design, which included stratification and clustering. The survey was stratified by governorate and further stratified by urban-rural. The survey was stratified by five regions: Eastern, Western, Southern, North and Central. Each was further stratified by urban-rural. Interviews were distributed proportional to population size. Municipalities represent the primary sampling unit (PSU). Within each municipality, neighborhoods, which are defined by the Department of Statistics, were selected proportional to size. Households were then randomly selected in clusters of 10. A total of 1,285 interviews were conducted in urban areas and 119 in rural areas.

Weighting method: Sample is self-weighted for probability of selection; post-stratification weights constructed for imbalances based on age and gender.

Country: Sudan

Field Period: Dec. 12 – 30, 2010 and March 24 – April 23, 2011

Principal Researcher: El-Mogiera Al-Sayed

Partner: Sudan Polling Survey Center

Sample size: 1,538

Sampling method: The survey represents a national probability sample design of adults 18 years and older. It was conducted face-to face in Arabic and used a complex sample design, which included stratification and clustering. The sample is composed of six strata which are the east, the north, the central region, Khartoum, Kordofan and Darfur. The sample is further stratified by urban and rural areas, Interviews were distributed proportional to population size. Census blocks based on the 2008 census are the primary sampling unit (PSU). Within each, households were selected in clusters of six. A total of 719 respondents were interviewed in urban areas and 819 in rural areas.

Weighting method: Sample is self-weighted for probability of selection; post-stratification weights constructed for imbalances based on age and gender.

Country: Tunisia

Field Period: Sep. 30 – Oct. 11, 2011

Principal Researcher: Iman Mizlini

Partner: Sigma Conseil

Sample size: 1,196

Sampling method: The survey represents a national probability sample design of adults 18 years and older. It was conducted face-to face in Arabic and used a complex sample design, which included stratification and clustering. The survey was stratified by governorate and further stratified by urban-rural. Interviews were distributed proportional to population size. Within each strata, delegations were selected proportional to population size. Within each delegation, sectors were selected proportional to size and within each sector blocks were randomly selected. Each block contained 10 households. Within each household, individuals were selected randomly using a Kish table informed by quotas for gender and age.

Weighting method: Sample is self-weighted for probability of selection; post-stratification weights constructed for imbalances based on age and gender.

Country: Yemen

Field Period: Feb. 1 – 15, 2011

Principal Researcher: Fuad al-Salahi

Partner: Sana'a University

Sample size: 1,200

Sampling method: The survey represents a national probability sample design of adults 18 years and older. It was conducted face-to-face in Arabic and used a complex sample design, which included stratification and clustering. The survey was stratified by governorate and further divided by urban-rural. Interviews were distributed population to population size. Following the framework of the 2004 Census, statistical blocks employed by the Central Statistical Office were used as primary sampling units (PSUs). Within each PSU, a block of houses was randomly selected. Households were randomly selected in clusters of 10. A total of 423 respondents were interviewed in urban areas and 777 in rural areas.

Weighting method: Sample is self-weighted for probability of selection; post-stratification weights constructed for imbalances based on age and gender.

Weighting method: Weighted for probability of selection; additionally weighted for imbalances based on age and gender.

Processing Notes

Survey Design: The survey in each country is designed to be nationally representative at the household level. Although certain geographic variables such as province or governorate are provided, the survey is not designed to be representative at sub-national levels.

Weight: The data set includes the weight variable WT. More detailed descriptions of the weight for each country can be found in the technical notes. The weight should be used to produce nationally representative results.

Missing Data: In cases where a questionnaire was completed but the response for a specific question was not marked by the interviewer or is otherwise missing, a code of 0 is applied unless otherwise noted.

Arab Barometer: Public Opinion Survey Conducted in Algeria, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Palestine, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Tunisia, and Yemen, 2010-2011

Variable Description and Frequencies

Note: Frequencies displayed for the variables are not weighted. They are purely descriptive and may not be representative of the study population. Please review any sampling or weighting information available with the study.

Summary statistics (minimum, maximum, mean, median, and standard deviation) may not be available for every variable in the codebook. Conversely, a listing of frequencies in table format may not be present for every variable in the codebook either. However, all variables in the dataset are present and display sufficient information about each variable. These decisions are made intentionally and are at the discretion of the archive producing this codebook.
